Matthew Boudreaux has a financial industry-affiliated business as a licensed insurance agent. From time to time, he will offer clients advice or products from this activity.

This practice represents a conflict of interest because it gives an incentive to recommend products and services based on the commissions or fees received rather than on the client's needs. This conflict is mitigated by disclosures, procedures, and the firm's Fiduciary obligation to place the best interest of the client first, and the clients are not required to purchase any products or services.

Clients always have the right to choose to decide whether to act upon the recommendation of the firm. The client always has the right to affect the recommendations through the professional of their choosing.

Item 5: Additional Compensation

Matthew J. Boudreaux may receive cash and non-cash compensation from certain third-party product sponsors as permitted by industry rules. In addition, sales by IARs may qualify them for additional compensation, including support for their business activities, attendance at seminars, and entertainment.

Matthew Boudreaux will also receive compensation from third-party investment advisors for referring client accounts to the third party for account management. The third party will pay the IAR a solicitation fee for the referral. The IAR may also serve as the registered representative of record on the assets managed by the third-party investment advisor. When this is the case, the IAR will receive normal and customary compensation (e.g., commissions, 12b-1 fees, trails) for the purchase of the investments. This compensation is in addition to the referral fee paid by the third-party advisor.
